

Zero Point Integration: How it Works

Utilizing Reiki as the carrier wave, ZPI links into the body's energy centers and the luminous, egg-shaped field that surrounds it, to assess and tap into the disparate neuroelectrical rhythms of the left and right hemispheres of the brain. A subtly complex internal combination of surrender and intent begins to foster synchronization. As the balance symbol is reached, the pulses merge until they fully integrate.

When the final symbol is activated and Zero Point (scalar) energy is brought into play, the energetic rhythms of participant and practitioner (which by now are also in sync) slow dramatically toward, and often reach, the base (and bass) harmonic (8 Hz) of the Schumann Resonance Belt that surrounds the planet. The harmonics of human fields mirror those of the belt, which accounts for the distance capabilities of this work. Transfer of resonance through and across it enables non-local causality. The effect is therefore not distance sensitive, and can be achieved without contact - or even proximity. The practitioner receives significant feedback through the hands either way.

At the final stage, the link facilitates clearing and balancing of the energy centers. Zero Point can then be focused on any remaining areas of discomfort or concern. What remains is a state of homeostasis that fundamentally affects structural balance, stress levels, symptom response, brain function, and more. This usually lasts for three days the first time – and progressively longer with future sessions, as the fields adjust and the body learns to maintain it. A single session is sometimes the end of a symptom or issue.

Hemispheric lateralization of the brain is, hormonally (and in other ways) a survival state. A fight-or-flight response. Working in a priority way, the brain regards survival as a higher priority than healing, maintenance and regeneration. Returned to homeostasis, the organism as a whole begins to work all of the self-healing miracles that are our birthright. People do not have souls. We ARE souls. We have bodies. And regardless of their condition, they are the most valuable things we ever own. The power that heals the body, is the power that made it. Zero Point is the original state of any system, and thus ZPI reintegrates us with the innate capabilities and capacities we were born with. Everything in the universe is either in balance, or seeking balance.
